

In a world where we are constantly distracted by daily tasks pulling our attention, it's easy to become lost. When this happens, we often live our lives without much care for those that struggle just to get by. It's a situation that is laden with corruption and causes even the best of us to walk all over each other just to make ends meet, but one day I believe there will be a time when the corruption will cease and that which oppresses us will be overtaken by the forces of nature itself.